

HandReach is working to make the world's best practices in pediatric burn and orthopedic care available to children in need of reconstructive or rehabilitative therapy regardless of income. The HandReach Children's Healing Initiative develops resources in medical and rehabilitative care for child trauma survivors in the developing world. We work at the acute, reconstructive, and psychosocial levels to help children debilitated by severe burns and amputations return to full function and a productive future.

At the heart of HandReach's mission lies a commitment to transforming institutions through developing the expertise of the people who make up those institutions. To fulfill this mission, HandReach is focusing on three areas of interest:

- Reconstructive Surgical Clinics.
- Psychosocial Rehabilitation Camps/Conferences.
- Co-op Programs, through partner universities.

HandReach brings together research and practice partnerships with the aim of enhancing the clinical expertise of all care providers involved in pediatric trauma rehabilitation. We advocate to promote greater access to integrated rehabilitative care, and a place in society for trauma survivors that includes greater access and acceptance for people with physical differences.
